WEINER AVOIDED STATE PRISON

Skipped Bail of $3,000 Having Been Convicted of Horse Stealing-Crocker Given a Chance by the Court-Chicken Case on Trial.

It became generally known on Tues- | uary term upon motion of Attorney day that Leon Weiner, who was convicted with two others of horse stealing, had skipped, when State Attorney H. A. Hull asked that the bond be called in that case. Judge Reed granted the motion, and the bond of $3,000 which was in cash and furnished by Frank Hertz of this city, will be turned over to the state. Weiner lived in Chesterfield and also New London. At the former place he had a farm where Abraham Needles and Harry Epstein brought two horses and other property which was stolen outside of Providence. Needles pleaded guilty and on trial the other two were convicted of horse stealing and sentenced to state prison, from which appeals were taken. Weiner was at first placed under $4,000 bonds, but went to jail, being unable to furnish it. Later the amount was reduced to $3,000, which he furnished and was given his liberty. The decision of the supreme court of errors to which the appeal was taken upheld the actiton of the superior court, finding no error. When Weiner was sought in New London he could not be found and is among the missing. H. A. Hull asked that the bond be Crocker Given a Year. Later in the day, Royal Crocker, who was jointly with L. White, indict-ed for the theft of liquors from the W. H. Farrell company of New Lon-don entered a plea of guilty. Counsel in his behalf said that he was the son of a former New London clergy-man, but his parents are both dead. He has always had a good reputation, and it was stated that he would be able to get work at once if allowed to. State Attorney Hull spoke of him as a young man, next to the oldest in a family of several children. He had done various things about the city, and family of several children. From that done various things about the city, and finally got a saloon. From that he frequented gambling places, neglected his family and wound up by taking liquors, which he turned over to White at a ridiculously low price. He thought the young man intended to do better. He thought it better that he should be providing for his family than serving time in jail.

Judge Reed sentenced him to jail for one year and suspended the sentence, providing the probation officer could get work for him at once. If not, he will consider the matter further. The case against White had previously been continued until the
